

'A Christmas Carol' by Charles Dickens – Knowledge Organiser

a. Stave 1: The narrator describes Scrooge's parsimonious, curmudgeonly nature. Scrooge is in his counting house, watching over his clerk (who has a very low fire, and is kept in a "cell"). Scrooge's jovial nephew, Fred, interjects and breaks the melancholy scene. Fred proclaims his love for Christmas and invites his Uncle to follow suit. Scrooge refuses. Fred invites his Uncle to dinner which Scrooge rebukes. Scrooge confronts his clerk, Bob Cratchit, complaining about Bob's wish to take a day off for Christmas. Begrudgingly Scrooge agrees but says he must arrive earlier the following morning. Scrooge enters his home and by a low fire, eats his gruel when the sound of heavy chains are heard. The Ghost of Marley appears and tells Scrooge that he is here to warn him, to give him a chance to escape his fate. Marley tells Scrooge about his own "chain" and tells Scrooge that he will be haunted by three spirits and that without their lessons, Scrooge has no hope of changing his fate.

b. Stave 2: Scrooge is visited by an "Unearthly visitor", the Ghost of Christmas Past. The spirit takes Scrooge to his childhood village and school. We see a "solitary child neglected by his friends". Scrooge watches his younger self absorbed by reading and kept company by the characters from novels including Ali Baba. Fan, Scrooge's sister, arrives one Christmas to take Scrooge home. We then see Scrooge apprenticed at Fezziwig's, Fezziwig is described as a joyful, benevolent benefactor: the clear antithesis to Scrooge. Scrooge is then shown his break up with Belle who explains that a "golden idol" (money) has come between them and that Scrooge is no longer than man he was. Scrooge is then shown Belle's family home which whilst not particularly handsome, is full of love, children and comfort; a clear contrast to Scrooge's situation. Scrooge is "broken" and asks to leave, Scrooge wrestles with the ghost and extinguishes the cap.

c. Stave 3: Scrooge encounters the Ghost of Christmas Present, essentially the personification of the Christmas spirit. The "jolly giant" is described as sitting on a "throne" of food and wearing a green robe with white fur cuffs, reminiscent of common images of Father Christmas. The Ghost shows Scrooge homes across London and in all occasions, despite their situation people are together and celebrating Christmas. The spirit then takes Scrooge to the meagre home of the Cratchit family where we see the family prepare a modest Christmas meal of goose. The family are clearly poor but are wealthy in love and affection. The spirit also takes Scrooge to see Fred's home where there is lots of laughter and love. Before the spirit leaves, Scrooge asks about the "claw" underneath the spirit's robes. The spirit explains they are Want and Ignorance: symbolic of the abhorrent treatment of the poor.

d. Stave 4: A "phantom", approaches Scrooge. The ghost takes Scrooge to a series of places including the London Stock Exchange where a group of businessmen discuss the death of a rich man. They explain they will only attend the funeral if there was food. We then visit a pawn shop in the underbelly of London where a group of thieves sell personal effects stolen from the dead man. Scrooge asks to see someone emotionally affected by the man's death and we are shown a couple in debt who are elated/relieved by the death of the man. Scrooge is then taken to the Cratchit home where we see the family struggling to cope with the death of Tiny Tim. Scrooge asks to know the identity of the man and is taken to a graveyard, overrun by weeds and neglected. Scrooge finds a grave with his own name. Appalled, Scrooge clutches the spirit and begs to allow him to change his fate. He promises to honour Christmas and live a new life following the lessons of the three spirits.

e. Stave 5: Scrooge is grateful for a second chance and transforms into a different man. Scrooge runs into the street and asks a local boy to go and buy the biggest turkey and it is sent to Bob Cratchit's. He meets one of the charity workers from stave 1, apologises and makes a generous donation. Scrooge then attends Fred's for Christmas dinner. The following morning, Scrooge plays a prank on Cratchit pretending to be annoyed by his lateness however then tells him he is to raise his salary and orders him to make up the fire and buy some more coal. The narrator finishes by telling us Scrooge was "better than his word" and was a "second father" to Tiny Tim.

f. Key Contextual Information

A Christmas Carol was published in 1843 Charles Dickens

In 1824, Dickens' father is sent to debtors' prison and Dickens is forced to give up his education until his father inherits some money to fund his education. Dickens was forced to take on a job labelling bottles in a workhouse. Dickens understood the hardships of poverty. Dickens was concerned with the social injustices of the Victorian epoch and his writing sought to expose the plight of the poor.

The New Poor Law

In 1834, the Poor Law Amendment Act was introduced. This led to a cut in aid given to the destitute to help them remain in their homes. As a result of austerity, workhouses were established and now if the poor required help, they would have to go to a workhouse to receive this. The very structure of workhouses were designed to encourage segregation and to ridicule the poor. The aim was often for them to be worse than the streets to discourage the poor's use of workhouses and encourage them to find their own means of making money.

Christmas and Tradition

A Christmas Carol profoundly criticizes the laws, policies, and economic system that promote such poverty. In this way, by allowing Dickens to use the harshness of winter to portray the terrible difficulty of the life of the poor, Christmas served Dickens as a vehicle not just for showing Scrooge's transformation but to appeal to readers' Christianity as well in an effort to change a society that was organized in some ways that Dickens saw as being profoundly un-Christian.
